Again, the Army.

Russia must have a coup d'etat, a responsible ministry, or anarchy. This is the summary of the situation that recent dispatches have outlined. Perhaps it is not quite accurate to suggest anarchy as a possibility of the future, when there is so much reason for regarding present conditions in the empire as equivalent to anarchy.

A coup d'etat means to prorogue the duma and send it home, and the duma would only acquiesce in such a program under compulsion of force. The army must be loyal, and there's the rub. Sooner or later the Czar's army is going to turn and rend him. It may not happen for another century, it may be tomorrow. But it will happen, if absolutism is to continue.

Two conflicting influences are always at work in such an army as that of Russia, as the history of military despotism proves. The instinct of obedience, of discipline, of unity, is centripetal. It tends to hold the organization together. But working along with this is also the centrifugal force. Men talk and learn and exchange ideas. They cannot be kept in abject ignorance. They have time and association and opportunities for intimacies and confidences. They develop a social consciousness that might not come to them in many generations but for the experience of the army.

Notoriously, these influences have been at work in the Russian army. Half the soldiers who went to Manchuria and found suffering and defeat because of incompetence at home became revolutionists or at least malcontents. The Czar today hesitates about dissolving the duma and squelching its troublesome demands for responsible administration, only because of the alarming reports of extended and increasing disloyalty. While he hesitates, the duma may yet force real concessions. Liberty will be in sight for Russia on the day when the soldiers refuse to obey the command to fire.

American Meats.

Secretary of Agriculture Wilson is a most cheering optimist, whose comfortable forecasts are especially entitled to consideration because ample experience has given ground for the impression that he knows whereof he talks. He told the country not long ago that there would be no more great and widespread and general crop failures in this country. Now he is telling about the future of the American meat industry. His reasons for assurance that this industry is still only in its infancy are certainly worthy of the consideration of anybody who may fear that serious damage has recently been inflicted on it.

American livestock raised out of doors, fattened out of doors, is known as the healthiest in the world, begins the Secretary. No other country produces corn and cattle side by side; and nothing else has ever been discovered which makes as good beef as corn. That is the basis of the superiority of American meats. Other countries employ various makeshifts to get inferior feed for "finishing" their cattle. They buy linseed cake, cottonseed cake, peanut cake, and feed them to produce their best beef, coming to the United States to get most of these foodstuffs, which are not much used here because the United States has corn. Finally, the Secretary gives assurance that steps will be taken to make the world know all these things, and know them thoroughly.

The real greatness of the meat industry has not yet been approximated, if Secretary Wilson is correct. The future will see it immensely bigger and more dominant than it is now, and it will be a domination of quality.

Our veteran Secretary of Agriculture is an expert in his business. He has devoted a lifetime to the science of agriculture. He will be fully recognized one of these days as the man who first succeeded in popularizing this science; who induced the farmers to realize that they needed to be scientists as well; who convinced them that people who write books may have some useful things to tell, and are not deserving of the unmitigated contempt that the farmer was once wont to display toward the book-lorn agriculturist. Withal, he is on the bull side of the market, and his tip is a good one to play.

A Papal Retreat.

No doubt now remains that the efforts of Pope Pius X to restore the Gregorian chants and the music of Palestrina to the Catholic Church service, to the exclusion of all other forms, have met with failure. The cyclical of a few years ago has never been obeyed in this country, for the simple reason that the ecclesiastical authorities here were convinced that it was impractical if not impossible.

Now Pius himself is apparently convinced of the truth. In the current number of Musical America is a dispatch dealing with a recent interview between the archbishop of New York and the Pope on the subject. It says among other things:

Archbishop Farley was very candid and told his holiness that every bishop in the United States had tried as best he could to enforce its provisions in every church of his diocese, but had found that the same difficulties were much opposed to the change, and that the exclusion of the women from the choir gave rise to dissensions and murmurs against the parish priests.

Pius X, who had listened with great attention to the archbishop's remarks, observed that the same difficulties were met with in Italy, and that in Rome itself few churches so far had even tried to comply with the provisions of the papal decree. In fact, an active movement was started at first among the choir singers to oppose its execution. All over Italy, the Pope said, the same was the case with the exception of some of the churches in charge of the religious.

The Pope said that much as he desired a reform in church music, he did not wish to push it too hard when the interests of the church were at stake, as was the case in America, and told the archbishop to inform his colleagues that he relied entirely on their discretion regarding the matter.

Thus, in all probability, ends a movement that, however conscientiously and devoutly conceived, was almost beyond the enormous power of the Vatican. American Catholics, practically without exception, will rejoice in such a settlement of the question.

Good evening; have you been safe and sane?

North Carolina Democrats have brought out former Governor Aycock for Vice President. Mr. Tillman and his pitchfork ought to be effective in promoting that movement.

Senator La Follette says Roosevelt is the only man who can defeat Bryan. How's that for modesty and self-abnegation?

This would be an appropriate day for the steamship America to turn up safe and sound.

A commission has been set at work to clean up the city of Madrid. It hasn't been really cleaned up since the United States did the job some eight years ago.

DIVE FOR TREASURE

IN SEAS OF GREECE

Will Seek Lost Works of Art Sunk Many Centuries Ago While on Way to Rome.

ATHENS, July 5.—To save the treasure-laden Turkish fleet sunk at Navarino in 1826 is the project of the Greek government, which has contracted with a divers' association of Leghorn for the gigantic task.

Seventy vessels of the Ottoman fleet were sunk by the combined English, French and Russian fleets "that day at Navarino," and they were believed to be carrying an immense amount of bullion.

The Leghorn divers, who are the most skillful in the Mediterranean, will also search for the Roman galleys laden with Grecian art treasures which were sunk between Candia and Cerigo, at the close of the Latin conquest of 1204. A beautiful Greek vase which the government bought at a good price has already been brought up from these wrecks, so the exact spot is already known.

MADLY JEALOUS, SHOT WIFE, SELF AND TWO CHILDREN

PHILADELPHIA, July 5.—In a fit of jealousy, Frederick Weber, according to the police, shot his wife last night outside their home, 1849 East Westmoreland street, wounding two little girls who were shooting wildly, and then turned the revolver on himself.

All four are lying at the Frankford Hospital. Weber was a bullet in his right temple and brain. The physicians say the wife-slayer is fatally injured. The others are in a critical condition.

SALOONS REFUSE TO SELL TO TERRE HAUTE OFFICERS

TERRE HAUTE, Ind., July 5.—The six councilmen who voted to remove Mayor Bideman, in the impeachment proceedings, must go dry. Terre Haute saloon keepers have decided. Several liquor men have notified the councilmen not to patronize their places. The bartender's union has also voted a boycott on them. It is said that while the mayor was charged with laxly enforcing the laws, there is better regulation than ever before.

JUST THINK OF IT!

Oh, if every day were the Fourth of July. What a glorious world this would be. We'd make fireworks shoot and sky-rockets fly. And never get tired—you and me.

Yes, if every day were the Fourth of July. We'd all be dead in a year. You'd be so tired in less than a month. You'd wish that Christmas was here. E. L. T.

NORFOLK A MECCA FOR ALL TOURISTS

Exposition Plans Are Being Realized By the Managers.

READY FIRST OF MAY

All Citizens in That Section of State Enthusiastic Over Progress Made and Ideas Developed.

"Norfolk is going to be the mecca of all tourists from far and wide next summer," said H. A. Hertz, a prominent business man of Norfolk, at the Dewey Hotel, "for we're going to have down our way the most interesting exposition this country has seen in a long time. In fact, I rather anticipate, from the plans that are already under way and are being carried out, that it will prove to be more interesting to American people for numerous reasons than any other ever held—not even excepting the great Centennial at Philadelphia. It will not be as large as the Chicago or St. Louis fairs, but it will have all the electric beauties of Buffalo and distinctly new feature—the most important—a congress of the armies and navies of the world."

Will Be Ready May 1. Mr. Hertz stated that the appropriation that was finally made by Congress last week has given new life to the exposition movement. "Advices received today from a friend of mine who, like everyone in Norfolk and vicinity, is enthusiastically booming 'Jamestown,' state that already more extensive work has begun on the grounds, and the management fully expects to have it open—really open and ready for visitors—by May 1, 1907," said Mr. Hertz. "If they disappoint the public in this, it will be due mostly to the fact that they were delayed several months by the failure of Congress to take the necessary action. President Roosevelt has accepted the invitation of the board of governors to formally open the fair April 25, and the work will be rushed from now on."

Mr. Hertz stated that for awhile it was feared by the Norfolk people that Speaker Cannon would entirely thwart the Government appropriation.

"Had the appropriation not been made," he said, "it is likely that the two big piers which are to be built out into Hampton Roads would never have materialized, even if the arrangements for the exposition had continued."

Battleships to Anchor by Piers.

"These piers are to form one of the big features of the exposition, and the ends will be surmounted with towers for lighthouse and wireless telegraph service, while between the two there will be a big lagoon, which will contain fleets of gondolas and other small craft. The main reason for the construction of these piers is in order that the large battleships from all nations may anchor alongside, so that visitors may go aboard. Otherwise they would have to lay out in the Rappahannock and in the harbor, difficult of access."

"The electrical effect may even surpass that at Buffalo and St. Louis. It will be particularly striking as seen across the bay, for all along the ocean front it will be a solid blaze of light."

Since the Federal appropriation has been assured, Mr. Hertz said, President Taft and Chief of Brooks Johnson, chairman of the board of governors, together with other officials who spent most of the winter in Washington, and even remained here till the last moment, have all assembled at the headquarters in Norfolk and have set to work to plans to make the exposition all they are claiming that it will be.

BELMONT COLONY AROUSES WHITES

organization means business, and means it all the time. Methods, when it comes to accomplishing the association's purpose, are not to be subjected to any very rigid scrutiny.

Real Estate Agents Surprised.

Barnard and Johnson were trustees for a syndicate and sold the land to William J. Sheets, an inventor, and it is said, a nephew of Senator Penrose, of Pennsylvania. Barnard and Johnson, who believed they had found a new representation to become a purchaser, by which the subdivision would be greatly improved, were much pleased with the deal.

Mr. Barnard himself entered into negotiations with Sheets to build on one of these, and his mother was going to build on another. He was overwhelmed with astonishment when he learned that Sheets, in a single day, had turned over the property to his colored clients.

"Why, he must have had a deed to these colored people in his pocket," said Mr. Barnard, this morning, "at the very time he was talking about selling lots to me."

Nobody over this matter than we are. We had not the faintest idea of the transfer in ownership that impended. On the district court records, however, that he was going to subdivide the land and sell the lots. It was then I entered into negotiations to become a purchaser, and I don't blame the people in Friendship Heights and the other settlements for being angry, but we are absolutely without blame."

Statement of Colored Man.

A. L. Satterwhite, of A. L. Satterwhite & Co., said a reporter of The Times this morning that Sheets had been employed to purchase the property because it was feared it could not be purchased for colored clients and for the purpose for which his firm destined it. The members of the firm are themselves colored men.

"The plan is," he said, "to establish a first-class suburb, where colored people live, and where they can be taught to save money, and own their own homes. Of course, there is no desire to offend anyone living in that vicinity, but if they are offended, that cannot be helped."

ALLEGED EMBEZZLER BROUGHT BACK

Joseph A. Hull was brought to Washington this morning in the custody of Detective Weedon, of the Central office, from Buffalo, N. Y., where he was arrested last Tuesday on a warrant charging that Hull embezzled several hundred dollars from the firm of S. J. Prescott & Co., of this city, while in their employ last March. Hull was later turned over to the
